

Training in occupational pensions

In many cases, the BVG is a complete mystery to prospective members of pension committees, who lack any prior knowledge whatsoever. However, this is by no means a task that should be taken lightly.

Training for prospective and current pension committee members is beneficial. This supports the collaborative management of occupational pension provision between employers and employees, and enables pension committee members to master the challenges of occupational pension provision and answer employees' questions competently.

Depending on the pension scheme model, the tasks, duties and responsibilities of the pension committee vary. Training requirements depend on the model and the members' prior knowledge.
